September 21, 2018

Dear valued customer,

Somewhat unexpectedly, there has been a large spike in ethane costs this month. Ethane is the primary feedstock used to manufacture the polyethylene we require to supply your film and bags. This cost increase along with continued strong domestic and global demand for polyethylene products has enabled our resin suppliers to implement a previously announced increase effective September 1st. Please keep in mind, that our resin suppliers have a second increase pending for October 1st that we will address at a later date.

In addition to this month's resin increase, Sigma Stretch Film also continues to experience still rising costs in freight, packaging, labor, additives, and other material and goods that go into supplying you with your products.

In response to these increases, Sigma Stretch Film will implement an increase of 4% effective with all new orders placed on or after October 5, 2018.

All orders must call for immediate delivery. Based on current lead-times and resin availability, Sigma Stretch Film can only accept a limited number of new orders. Sigma Stretch Film reserves the right to accept or decline all orders for any reason.

Your Sigma Stretch Film Sales Professional will be in contact with you to answer any of your questions and advise you of changing market conditions.

Sincerely,

Bill Lenchinsky
Executive Vice President
